Did You Know?

In talking with children about allyship, the simple idea of “making room” can be easily understood. “Making room” means enlarging the circle, scooting over to allow others in, and yet is more than just offering up physical space. It asks each of us to do more than acknowledge, tolerate, and respect each other’s differences. It even asks us to move beyond kindness. "Making room" is a call to positive action and requires us to support those around us, in our neighborhoods, classrooms, and communities, regardless of our differences. It means seeing those differences as a strength rather than as a threat or source of shame. “Making room” is the idea of not just offering everyone a place at the table, but including everyone in planning the communal meal to ultimately create a place of solidarity.

Illustrated by the famous Fan Brothers who capture the complex depth of this tale with their consistently evocative details. This emotionally packed story of friendship, love, and loneliness is a heartwarming twist on a theme of traditional enemies.

Intersection Allies: We Make Room For All by Chelsea Johnson
A remarkable picture book about allyship and intersectionality where we see how a community can come together in everyday situations. The end notes offer a page-by-page discussion guide and much more. A wonderful resource for children.

Fry Bread by Kevin Noble Maillard
A thoughtful and inspiring story about much more than food. Told with both depth and subtlety, addressing family, community, and cultural issues, this book offers warmth and beauty to readers of all ages. End notes offer outstanding cultural details.

Finding Kindness by Deborah Underwood
A powerful story of the simple and abundant ways we can model kindness everyday. Rhyming text and sweet illustrations bring a variety of people in a community to life, asking the reader to reflect on ways they can be kind.

Like A Girl by Lori Degman
An informational picture book that changes the connotation of 'like a girl'. The accomplishments of 24 multicultural female leaders are shown in vivid details, with end notes sharing a minibiography of each one, making this an engaging read aloud as well as an excellent reference.

I Remember: Poems and Pictures of Heritage by Lee Bennett Hopkins
A celebration of culturally diverse poetry by some of the most important voices in children's literature today. Illustrations by talented artists add a layer of visual lyricism to this moving poetry collection.

Mary Wears What She Wants by Keith Negley
This book shows the determination of a young Mary Walker to navigate her own way in life by dressing in pants. We are offered a glimpse of Mary's trailblazing life of pushing against the constrictions of societal norms for women in order to create a meaningful life for herself and others.

The Scarecrow by Beth Ferry
Illustrated by the famous Fan Brothers who capture the complex depth of this tale with their consistently evocative details. This emotionally packed story of friendship, love, and loneliness is a heartwarming twist on a theme of traditional enemies.

Sulwe by Lupita Nyong'o
Drawing on her own experience with colorism, Oscar-winning actress Nyong'o eloquently gifts us a simple fable about Night and Day to explain the beauty of darkness. Harrison's use of bold, contrasting color creates a dream-like world for this unique and thoughtful tale.
